KEYMACRO is a Windows GUI application that is a password key logger that automatically logs keys typed by a user. The password is then saved to a log file. The log file can be read by any other application that will provide access to the log file. One of the greatest problems with password protecting software is the fact that a user may be required to access a file using a certain password. However, when the user needs to use the password, he can not remember it or it is not available. Because of this, people often use complex passwords that are difficult to remember or come up with complex alphanumeric strings that are difficult to type. This is often called complex password mnemonics. This is where KeyMACRO comes in. KeyMACRO is a password key logger that automatically logs keys typed by a user. The password is then saved to a log file. The log file can be read by any other application that will provide access to the log file. For example, if a user has a Windows XP install CD that he uses to install Windows XP, he can copy the KeyMACRO log file to the CD and then boot to the CD to access the log file. KeyMACRO can be used to avoid many of the issues with complex passwords. KeyMACRO automatically logs keys typed by a user and then stores them in a log file that is saved to the system drive. This log file can be read using any other application that will provide access to the log file. The log file is created in the My Documents directory by default. The log file name and location can be changed by using the -loc parameter. KeyMACRO has been tested with Windows 2000, Windows XP, Windows Vista, Windows 7, Windows 8 and Windows 10. KeyMACRO does not record the password after it has been typed. This means that there is no risk of someone intercepting the password as it is being typed. KeyMACRO is fully automated. It works without a user needing to have any interaction with the program. KeyMACRO will automatically detect if there is a USB keyboard connected to your PC and will automatically log the keys that are typed when the keyboard is plugged in. If you are using a Windows Tablet that uses a Bluetooth connection for its keyboard, KeyMACRO will automatically log the keys that are typed when the keyboard is connected.
