It helps to see and feel the emotions that are accompanying the cognitive view, metaphorically speaking. It is also helpful to align your thoughts, words and deeds to the same emotion(s) and value(s). It is also important to understand the reasons for believing that there is no intrinsic value in any of the above that pertain to an individual's belief system. If you ask most people, "What is happiness?" they will probably answer something like, "I want to be happy." What does this mean? In this instance, the individual is saying that their emotions, specifically, happiness are what they want. This statement is the result of a belief system (lack of belief system) that has been formed over a lifetime. So, what is the root problem here? The reason we cannot be happy is because we have a belief system that says "happiness" is everything. When we believe the opposite, that happiness is nothing, we naturally begin to think differently. What makes a difference in our thoughts is the truth. When we accept that the truth is that happiness is nothing, we will begin to act differently. This in turn will affect the way we feel. To be happy is to be happy for what you have. It is not a lack. It is a "noneck" state of being. In case you missed it: Many people all over the world complain about how they are not happy. You can probably tell, because these folks do not feel that they are getting what they want out of life. What is the root problem here? They have a belief system that
