According to Australian Taxpayers Alliance (ATC) chairman Jim Slaven, it is only a matter of time before Australian’s pay their $1.7 billion yearly tax burden. “The Government has said that they will be taking out the highest marginal rate on high-income earners but there is an interesting wrinkle in the proposal. The Government is proposing to use a definition of high income that is not binding to create a high-income tax zone in rural areas,” he said. “This has been introduced without consultation or feedback to farmers, small business, and retirees. “But the Government should have thought about that and given rural areas a seat at the table.” Mr Slaven added that the concept of a national service, “would be good for all Australians.” “There is a common rule of thumb among Australians who are striving to live in the country. “They will move to a thriving rural area. “If you want to live and work in a thriving rural area, the natural place to start is to buy a lot of land, but a lot of Australians don’t have the flexibility or means of doing that. “That is why it has

When I apply a style to a Button in my main window, it works, but when I apply it to a User Control, it doesn't. To see my issue, I've added a button, with a style, to an empty project. When I right click the control, I see that the style I added to the main window will apply to the control. So far so good. However, if I add a User Control, that contains a Button, a TextBox, a Label and a RichTextBox, I can't see that Style I created for the main window apply to the User Control. Why can I add a style to a control that is not a User Control?

How do I make a Style that can apply to every User Control in my application? A: In your mainWindow.xaml code and then in the same code you can set the style there: bff6bb2d33

Company Agenda holds several big events in New Jersey each year. These events usually include a charity event and at least two networking events including one for retiring N.J. businesses and the other for New Jersey businesses looking to relocate. No matter how big or small, every company is invited to the table at Company Agenda events. These events provide a perfect way for companies to meet, learn and grow. Some of the bigger events, and we hope you will come and join us in a few of them, include two N.J. business expos in Somerset and Toms River along with several expos in Philadelphia, PA and See's Candies on Cinco De Mayo. For so many reasons, we are so excited to be an integral part of this important networking and learning dynamic. It is our goal to be a 100% events sponsor in 2013. We hope you will join us for these events to learn about our clients, vendors and about new ways to grow, learn and get ready for the new year. We look forward
