Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of and an apparatus for quantitatively analyzing a surface of an object by utilizing pattern recognition, and more particularly to a method of and an apparatus for quantitatively analyzing a surface of an object such as a steel sheet by utilizing pattern recognition in a design phase of the object. 2. Description of the Related Art Steel sheets are generally subjected to various kinds of surface treatment processes, but the surface state of the steel sheets, particularly the state of the surfaces of the steel sheets after a process, is one of the important factors in assuring the quality of the finished products. The surface state includes the state of a coating film such as a galvanized film. It is important to evaluate the surface state of the steel sheets in the design phase, so that a process, which is unfavorable to the quality of the finished products, is not performed on them. In this aspect, examples of the design phase include a phase of evaluation of coating film state before coating and a phase of evaluation of coating film state after coating. The coating film state before coating is generally evaluated by a method of detecting a coating thickness using a measuring instrument. As methods of evaluating the coating film state after coating, there have been proposed various methods which use an image processing technique such as a threshold value, a grayscale pattern matching, a region segmentation, and a pattern recognition technique. In the pattern recognition technique, for example, a black line is automatically produced on the surface of a steel sheet by using a laser, and the number, the position, and the width of the black line are automatically measured. For example, Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication (Kokai) No. 58-136039 discloses a method of automatically measuring the diameter of a black line 0cc13bf012

Pupil dilatation is used to detect the presence or absence of light reflex in the eye. The pupillary response is measured by observing the movement of the pupil by means of a light reflex in the eye. A problem is that the only current method of measuring pupillary reflex is by looking with the hand or eye (watching someone) making it very subjective and not very accurate. Furthermore, with a conventional pupillometer, a human observer usually is required to detect the pupil size while looking at the displayed numbers on the screen. Again, this is subjective and also not very accurate since the movement of the pupil is very small. Hence, a pupil size determination is highly dependent on the skills of the human observer. Another problem is that the signal from the pupil meter device needs to be fed into the measuring instrument. This can be a problem if a sinusoidal signal that is hard to detect is fed into the measuring instrument (e.g., a potentiometer, etc.). Accordingly, there is a need for a new method and apparatus for the objective measurement of a pupil. Most of you already know that there is a NN-based "boomer" scamming the internet: what you don't know, or may not care about, is that there is also a scammer trying to profit from the boomer. Each of these is a well-documented case of a con artist exploiting human weaknesses (information asymmetry on their side), and is part of a larger problem of distributed denial of service attacks (DDOS). I have recently been contacted by a group of alleged Vietnam War veterans who claimed that they were targets of the same scammer who preys on the boomer. It seems that the boomer is probably also targeting other humans in other countries. I created this blog
