* Be aware that any files you create using Photoshop, be they raster or vector, are proprietary. You cannot claim rights to the images you create. In the digital era, you are free to use the images in one way, but you cannot claim a copyright or license for using them in another way. The free open-source version of Photoshop, GIMP (GNU Image Manipulation Program), will get you started without licensing any of the software. You can use and modify images made with GIMP in much the same way that you would work with a standard editor, such as a word-processing program. However, it lacks many of the capabilities of the paid software, including text and color manipulation and new non-destructive editing options. If you are using a non-Mac operating system (meaning a Windows or Linux system), you will need to find a different editor to help you edit your images. # H. Some Other Software for Working with Graphics Some of the following software programs can be useful for creating graphics. Many of the programs listed are equally capable of working with both vector and raster graphics. The programs below offer different features and allow you to vary the output of your graphics depending upon what you're trying to accomplish. You can use these programs for web graphics, for print graphics, or for any other project you might need to create. Some of these programs also include the same kind of workflows that you can find in Photoshop and GIMP.

Kate Willson Brightly Wishes Saturday, January 16, 2010 In a way, I think I've been preparing for this sort of post for several years now. If you'll look back at some of the posts I've written, you'll see that I've had this storyline in mind to some extent. It has been about all the perils and pitfalls one runs into when living with chronic illness. First, my husband. He was my best friend. We'd meet almost every day and I'd nurse him and take care of him. We'd love each other, laugh at each other's shenanigans and celebrate the successes. We'd work together to make the hospital work, and on so many occasions he would take me aside and we'd talk about how to make it all better. We'd meet almost every day and he'd nurse me. He'd help me do my hair and put my make-up on, and he'd act as my care-giver to make the hospital work. I'd be so blessed to have a marriage like that. It has been a beautiful relationship. Then, unfortunately, he started to decline. The loss of motor skills, the lapses in memory, the loss of appetite; it all started. At first it was just a little here and a little there, then it progressed to a steady decay. He became an invalid. As his decline continued and his use of language and memory declined, it became increasingly difficult for us to communicate. When we did talk, it was often very brief and soon became a drill of repetition and broken sentences. The rest of our day was spent in silence. He was my husband. We'd been married for nearly 40 years and we'd spent so many of them together. We'd had so many of those precious moments together; it was painful to watch him become a 'little person'. Life in the home became very difficult for me. He seemed to run down and I was responsible for him. I'd left my job some years earlier to be with him and to help him out. It was incredibly hard to get used to being the primary caregiver. It wasn't a job I was prepared for and I began to feel like I was failing him. It was hard to go and perform at work every day knowing what my day was going to be like at home. And it was hard to see the things that I loved and cherish about him and his family slowly fade away.
