David LaMacchia and Eric Rescorla make use of a rather involved scheme of three authorizations to give assurance of authentication and non-repudiation. Eve Alice Bob has already established a cryptographic key using some secure, irreversible, efficient (i.e. without attacker knowledge) key exchange algorithm. Alice sends the shared key to Bob Alice selects an arm of an XOR gate, applies a one-way function f and computes $k = f(h(a|b|c))$, using $h()$ as described below. Bob selects an arm of the same XOR gate, applies f and computes $h(a|b|c) = f(k)$. The authentication verification algorithm is: Eve can establish the authenticity of a message (independently from the legitimacy of the signer), if the message has no errors in the f operation (this is an argument). Bob can establish the legitimacy of a message (independently from the authenticity of the signer), if the message has no errors in the f operation (this is another argument). Bob can prove that he has signed a message (which is the analogue of Eve's problem), if the message has no errors in the f operation (this is yet another argument). 6d1f23a050
