Only by significantly doubling or tripling the volume in the relationship can one begin to "get beyond the generalities" of the mythical. because since the myth of the "One Love" took place in a culture that had been patriarchal, patriarchy naturally arose. The idea of one love, one spirit, one soul, is a false idea that only exists in myth, in ideal. What we need in our spiritual relationship with each other is a balance or wisdom, to know the difference between the illusion and the reality. To "get beyond the generalities" of our relationship requires that we stop seeing each other as one and the same person, or a soul with a single, final essence, that we stop seeing ourselves as a single and unitary subject and person. When we stop seeing ourselves as a single and unitary subject and person, and instead see that our subject-object duality exists for a being-in-itself, the one and only truth, the truth in my own experience, the truth in the experience of the other being, then we are no longer "one with" each other, we are "in" each other, and the experience is very different. Indeed, we are more the same than different, we are the same, but have two separate minds, two minds that don't always agree, even though they are parts of the same body, parts that do see themselves as a unitary object and subject, a single being. A unity that is only in the "I" part and the "I" part of the "we" part
