computer to handle multiple tasks at once. When working as a designer or digital artist, using multiple Adobe applications at the same time can become a very normal practice. This includes making corrections such as color correction, removing noise and shadows and brightening, removing blemishes, correcting exposure, and enhancing overall brightness and contrast. , this program is interconnected to many other areas of the school (i.e. a student depends on test scores in other classes for their grade point average) which makes it challenging for students who are not high achieving to maintain a GPA that is commensurate with their strengths and interests. The CCSS have recognized this and are seeking input for ways to address this challenge. I don't believe that this task should be at the school level, rather it should be at the state/regional level. I strongly opposed the CCSS. For one, I think they fully accepted the premise that schools should be able to determine curriculum when they see fit (which is what I was told was the thinking behind the CCSS all along), and that the goal of these tests were to help teachers recognize strengths and weaknesses in students. This seems like a solvable problem to me, but I digress. I said that for those who can't do well on the SAT or ACT, their scores don't matter. I now have proof that I was wrong.
