I suppose some of the comments here are more review of the public beta that the finished product, so I'll try to take that into consideration as well :)
Anyhow...
First and foremost I love it. It's fast, it's feature-packed (although many features are already in LR4). Smooth UI, great layout, great features; it pretty much blows out the competition. In fact I've been a critic of LR in the past because it's missing important features, and this is a welcome change. The only thing I don't like about it is some of the "smart" features (Zoom to aspect, etc). My understanding is that it has to do with growing image files, and that this will be fixed in 5.2.
I do think it has a long road ahead of it, but I'm excited for its future. I hope they keep up the quality of this product, but by it's very nature they will not. I do understand quality control at a certain level, but the amount of changes they make, and the infrequent roll-outs have made some users unhappy (another reason I think it's great, so many people will get a chance to try it, and then leave happy about their choice).
On another note: no more Layers/Layers panel in the product menus. Major shift from LR to PS. Their website is very user-friendly, but to use the product you have to log-in. I'm a sucker for things like this, but it just doesn't make sense to me. For people who are very experienced, it shouldn't matter at all, but for someone like me who doesn't have experience...it's a major shift that I just can't see working out for most users. I guess it's great if you want to do complex tasks. For regular users, I can't see it being ideal. As for LR5.2, it's pretty huge, and like they say some time ago, "hey, we built it...it's ours to release...". I really think someone will do something about this, and I wish it wasn't this way.

The ancient Polynesians have a legend about travel. It goes something like this: The first man encountered the first woman. He pointed to the beach and she made a short, sharp, bared-teeth sound. She wanted to mate. He pointed to the ocean and she made a long, low sound. She wanted to travel. It's more than just a romantic story; it is one of the most pivotal stories in the history of humanity. It has set the stage for the travels of individuals, nations, and global society. That's why travel matters. Travel opens people's minds. Whether it's an overnight trip or a multi-country trip, travel has the potential to expose people to new cultures, education, experiences, and knowledge. Travel also gives individuals a chance to escape from routine. And it refocuses people on the things in life that are important. Travel is about doing new things, learning about different cultures and philosophies, and experiencing new things. Travel is about discovery and evolution. e3d0a04c9c
